American Energy Partners, Inc. Announces Removal of Caveat Emptor from Ticker Symbol

Allentown, Pennsylvania. July 1, 2019 – American Energy Partners, Inc. ("American Energy" or the "Company") (OTC PINK: AEPT) is pleased to announce that the caveat emptor symbol, which had previously been associated with its stock ticker, has been removed by OTC Markets and the Company has been restored to Pink Current status.

The Company discourages any and all promotional activity by non-Company actors, and encourages investors and potential investors to review the Company's public filings, its website and its press releases, and to discuss these matters with their personal legal and financial advisors. Non-Company newsletters/recommendations, websites or general stock symbols/classifications or other identifiers regarding our securities, whether positive or negative, should not be relied on because these items are simply opinions/policies of a third party. These third parties are, in many instances, paid by the publisher or other third parties and the Company believes that they profit from the publication of this literature and the results on the market. These materials should not be a substitute for investors' research and/or independent decision-making.

Brad Domitrovitsch, Chief Executive Officer of the Company commented, "Over the past several months, the Company has worked with the OTC Compliance Department and the Company is pleased to have the caveat emptor symbol removed, returning the Company to Pink Current status. We would like to thank OTC Markets for their diligence in this matter. We are looking forward to continuing to drive shareholder value over the coming months."
